

Regina Sandreuter

Aesthetically beautiful, wonderful to touch and to hold, yet with a look as delicate as fine china, Regina's dolls are exceptional creations whose artistry will stand the test of time. You will be amazed at the balance and range of natural posing from Regina and Abhinavo's patented multi-pose body. Their artistically and carefully hand-painted eyes bring out an emotional quality rare in today's dolls. Expert craftsmen make the leather shoes and boots to exact specifications. The clothing, which can be removed, is timeless yet modern, sewn from natural fibers with delicate patterns. The porcelain is very fine; beauty and technique are wedded successfully.

I was just wrapping up the last 5 dolls for The Toy Shoppe and - I realized I find it really hard to part with them...

- Regina

This year, Regina announced her retirement. As she produced very small, limited editions, we encourage you to act quickly if you are interested in one of her rare and precious dolls.

Xenis

Founded in 1994 from her basement, Marlene built a reputation for creating some of the finest wood dolls in the world. Handcrafted from Canadian maple and other selected hard woods, Marlene and her daughters Tania and Jesse have turned their love for the arts and the magic of classic children's stories into unique, eye-catching creations. Each has an expressive sculpt brimming with character and is fun to display and pose. The solid wood bodies are crafted and finished by hand and the original clothing designs are individually tailored. Xenis collectibles are made in very small, limited editions and signed by the artist. Design and craftsmanship of this caliber are rare in the world today and will be a special treasure for your family to enjoy.

R. John Wright

The Toy Shoppe has offered the creations of R. John Wright since 1979. When we first saw John and Susan's work, we were not only impressed by the fine craftsmanship but also by the great charm and character of each piece. John and Susan continue to display the virtuosity of true artists when considering fine and original design, beautiful craftsmanship and the use of exceptional materials of the highest quality. The creation of each piece is overseen by John and Susan in their New England studio. Work of this nature can only be made in small quantities, so every piece is all the more special.

John and Susan often select beloved characters from classic children's books for their inspiration. They study the artwork thoroughly to be faithful to the original artist's presentation. At the same time, they bring their own artistic touches to the piece. It is almost magical how John and Susan bring well known two dimensional drawings into the real three dimensional world. Each of our favorite characters arrives looking exactly as we dreamed they would!

Friedericy Dolls

Since 1990, Judith and Lucia Friedericy have created extraordinary dolls that have been showcased throughout the United States and Europe. This talented mother and daughter team takes their inspiration from children's heroes and heroines, theatrical characters and mythical figures. Stunning and original, Friedericy Dolls are one-of-a-kind, wax-over-porcelain art dolls. Never made from a mold, each work of art is hand-sculpted by Judith. Then each figure is painted, wigged and dipped in wax before getting costumed in the finest fabrics by Lucia, an award-winning theatrical costume designer.

Each Friedericy masterpiece speaks of the love and thought that went into its creation. Every unique edition is a work of art that will be the prize of any collection.

We have always loved the whimsical style and magical touch of Friedericy dolls!

We can work with Lucia to create a unique edition just for you... call us toll free for more information 1 800 447-7995.

Susan Krey

An award-winning artist renowned for her superb sculpting, Susan's lifelike wax-over-porcelain dolls are phenomenal. Their larger, more realistic size is very engaging and rare, especially since they are produced in small, limited editions. Susan's dolls are easily recognized and cherished by the serious collector for their appealing faces and fine workmanship. The dolls' unique clothing is chosen to enhance their personality and culture.

Susan's work has been exhibited in museums around the world. We congratulate Susan on her 30th anniversary of dollmaking!

Sylvia Weser

Dollmaking is a long and arduous labor of love for this talented German artist. Using only the finest Limoges porcelain, she patiently works this precious material through meticulous sculpting and time-consuming firings to create her magnificent dolls. The facial features painted by hand, the beautiful costuming, the German glass eyes – every facet of her work is truly outstanding down to the french manicure on Lopita's fingers and toes!

“ I paint each doll in many layers, and for a dark skin tone, I need up to eight firings just to achieve a natural look! ”

– Sylvia

Käthe Kruse

Käthe Kruse dolls have endured the test of time for 100 years. Born in Germany in 1883, Käthe and her husband Max, a famous sculptor, were active in Berlin's artistic and literary circles. She wanted her children to grow up with dolls they could love, cuddle and carry around, rather than the fragile porcelain dolls prevalent at the time. Käthe began creating dolls for her children in 1905 and five years later exhibited them in Berlin. With two big orders from the United States, she founded her own doll company and led it to worldwide success.

Created today with the same careful attention to detail and using the original patterns, Käthe Kruse Classic Dolls continue to be made of cloth, stuffed with reindeer hair and painted by hand. Recognized the world over as the epitome of the classic doll, these dolls are in a class of their own. No doll collection is truly complete without at least one Käthe Kruse creation.

Maggie Iacono

This former elementary school teacher became interested in dollmaking after her first daughter was born. Maggie has since become a very accomplished, award-winning doll artist with her work now displayed around the world – including the Louvre in Paris! Crafting each of her small, limited editions completely by hand, Maggie's wool felt dolls are renowned for their delicate hand-painting and the unique jointing system invented by her and her husband, Tony. Her dolls have beautiful real hair. Their costuming is gorgeous. Maggie devotes the most time to this aspect of each doll and with her wonderful sense of fashion and inviting color palette, they are a true joy.

I enjoy playing with all the different textiles that I use and inventing ways to transform them and embellish the fabrics in different ways.

Bets van Boxel

Bets van Boxel's extraordinary skill in creating porcelain dolls places her in a very small, exclusive group of artists who are able to draw amazing realism and expression from this difficult medium. Beginning with pure white porcelain, Bets brings her masterpieces to life through repeated color firings, a difficult and time-consuming practice. Her dolls take on a warmth and emotional quality that leave no doubt as to the passion and love that go into their creation. Inspired by the children she meets in her travels around the world, as well as the natural surroundings in which they live, Bets brings her dolls to life through very expressive sculpting and meticulously detailed painting. Seeking local fabrics from each location, she chooses cloth and accessories to remain culturally authentic. Created entirely by hand at Bets' studio in the Netherlands, these small, limited editions are masterfully sculpted with very compelling expressions.

Eva BeyTra

A lot of handwork, artistry and love go into the making of each all-wood doll by German artist Eva Beyerle-Traubinger. Beginning with a polymer sculpt, Eva immerses herself into every detail of the creative process until she finishes the maple wood doll by hand. Each doll has a real hair or mohair wig and a hand-painted face with a delightful expression of childish wonder. The bodies feature 5 ball-joints and a swivel arm joint for natural posing. The detailed outfits that she makes are equally as lovely... a perfect complement to their appeal. Unpretentious with a simple and honest charm, Eva's creations capture the warmth and enchantment of fine wood dolls.

Stephanie Cauley

Stephanie Cauley began sculpting faces and small figures in the 1990s. An optometrist by day, Stephanie quickly realized her passion for creating one-of-a-kind dolls and began studying sculpting. Polymer clay in Stephanie's hands is magically transformed into a realistic and lifelike character. Producing every detail of the doll herself, Stephanie loves the challenge – and the reward – of making figures capable of eliciting such a strong emotional response.

Leslie Molen

Dragon Story Girl was inspired by the children's hats made by the Miao and Dong Chinese Minority Groups. These hats are made by expectant mothers for their unborn children, incorporating a protective quality into each one.

Leslie's dolls are very traditional. The stone-clay head is sculpted by hand and overlaid with a special Japanese silk that has a beautiful matte finish with a very light texture. Her expression is also painted by hand. The bodies are made of cloth and firmly stuffed with wire in the fingers.
